franchiseopportunities@g6hospitality.com,jsaenz@g6hospitality.com,nsimon@g6hospitality.com,dpatel@g6hospitality.com
4 □ 21 □ □□ □ □□ 2:07
About three months ago, the idiot housekeeper, also a liar, agreed that a beeping smoke alarm is "Distracting." I also explained to him about sound at night vs. sound during the day--he claimed to not understand why sound at night was worse than sound during day so I covered that. That was apparently new information to him but I don't think so. Then what that dumbass does is clean the room, with the alarm beeping while he's in there, then an idiot at the front desk books the room--after shucking and jiving with the housekeeper in the room with the beeping alarm. Both idiots are in the room with the alarm going off. 108 isn't as used as 107 is; but what happens is people in 107 tolerate a beeping smoke alarm. That's great for Motel 6 because it doesn't have to do anything about it. Not everyone has tolerated it, though, that's a minority of persons. Motel 6 says "Fuck the minority." It's why the minority always gets fucked and why that alarm comes on around 6:30 AM. The majority fucks the minority; a minority owns everything which is another problem concerning numbers. One of the last tenants in 107, whose girl was having a baby in the next few days, they were the minority, too--they disconnected the alarm, though, after tolerating it for days, and weren't the first tenants to do so. Then Motel Idiots reconnected the alarm bringing us back to the same information known for months. My smoke alarm went off around 10 PM last night only once and possibly for the first time; that's great because I'm going to disconnect it and call the manufacturer but I'm also going to let it ring all day in an attempt to grind the fuck out of whoever is in 105. I'll tell them that's the way Motel 6 does things.

That's not the only call I'll be making. I'm also going to start calling stores about their shopping carts--homeless people bring shopping carts to the property and leave them there--other homeless people take them away sometimes, which is good. It's what happened to the last one. Shopping carts are bad for franchise development--they make the property look like shit. Like it's a crackhouse; who put the shopping cart there could have gotten it from anywhere--who knows if he pushed it from the store--but he doesn't live there, either way, so left it there. The next day it was closer to people's nice things, like cars, that pissed me off--he could have pushed it back to the store but because it appears all his teeth are gone and he's young it's probably why he pushed a shopping cart to Motel 6. Shopping carts run into cars and leave dents--it's what wheels do--whoever invented the wheel knew nothing about crack so can't be held responsible for what's become of the wheel. Then the insurance company doesn't want to pay when they learn it's Motel 6 and some goober you see all the time who doesn't live there. People who don't live there trash the property and disturb the peace--they're not paying for any of it so is to be expected.

Homeless people bounce from hotel to hotel looking for a free ride--it's to The Deluxe and back for some people day and night--I call it The Overground Railroad due to how often I see it--it's nearly a straight line to the horizon--The Deluxe also thrives for loiterers so is why I skipped it--when I got to my room someone hanging around asked me for a ride--I just checked-in so didn't have time to give someone I didn't know a ride right away. I nearly went to the front desk and reported it but didn't--what a waste of time that would have been. I think it was Daud Graham but can't be certain--it would be him later, though--and many others since. Tahmez Davidson could be one of them--it looks like him but is hard to tell--he's put on a lot of weight since the last time he showed himself. He has idiot buddies that put him up for 5 minutes or 5 hours--in between he loiters until someone gives in no matter the window. I see a lot of him now--he's in and out of rooms all the time despite never checking in or out; he stands at doors a lot at rooms he doesn't pay for and never will. He is the epitome of a pest and a nuisance--he's so bad people who help him tell me he sucks. If it were me I'd charge $20 a head; they got cigarettes and dope so have the money. He knocked door to door at The Royal Inn--which also has no security--I typically don't answer knocks on the door but someone else did--it was, I was told "A skinny, black guy" according to Danny Eckard which sounded like Davidson and was--Eckard told him he wasn't getting into his room because he would be evicted if caught. Eckard is a rare breed making sound decisions--he thought of himself and not a deadbeat. Davidson was arrested shortly after for B&E somewhere else. I think he's there now but don't know but I do know he doesn't live there, whoever it is; when police show, he's gone--because he's trespassing and knows it. But with Motel 6 and all its cameras he has no worries. He walks around in violation of pants-on-the-ground expectations; it is additionally bad for franchise management to see a guy's ass cheeks hanging out wherever he goes. It's indecent exposure but not anymore. Pants-on-the-ground is okay, it's a thing for now I don't get--I wouldn't anyone suffering my underwear, or people I don't know looking at my ass but all of your underwear showing down past your ass is not what I want to see at my door--that tells me you're a lost cause with shitty parents--a male prostitute or loser who should be arrested for trespassing. I already have dumbfucks pushing shopping carts past my door, leaving them there, then coming back for the next meth party thanks aw